Chestnut Challenge

You just don't see American Chestnut trees anymore. The once common tree is now all but completely absent from our eastern forests. For centuries they were an essential part of the forest ecosystem and the economy. We have found a few trees on our Smith Pond Shaker Forest property and suspect there are more.

Tuck Builds Community and New Trails

For the second year in a row UVLT has been selected as one of the four community non-profits to work with the Tuck School of Business as a part of their "Tuck Builds" program. Tuck builds is a program that pairs incoming Tuck School of Business students with a local non-profit for four days of service. The program allows students "the rewarding opportunity to help the local community, meet new people, and informally learn how business knowledge intersects with social and environmental needs."

Logging at Up on the Hill

Things are happening at Up on the Hill! UVLT's newest conservation area will be experiencing a period of forest management and logging for the next 6-8 weeks. Logging began September 4th in the central section of the 1100 acre property. Trails in this area of the property are closed to use until the logging is complete. Read on to learn about all of UVLT's management at Up on the Hill

Ferris Farm - Conserved!

In September Herb and Laurie Ferris signed a donated conservation easement on their 150 acre farm on Hewitt and Brook Roads in Windsor. This project protects more than a mile of Mill Brook frontage, with extra buffer protection to limit future activities near the bank of the brook. In addition, other brooks, wetlands, farmland, and a mile of scenic road frontage with views to Mount Ascutney has been protected. Thirty-seven acres of prime agricultural soils have been protected, much of it tillable, keeping it available for growing local crops and food in the future.
